

Our $10 and $15 Suits Are Worth Five Dollars More Than What You Pay For It

The moment you examine our clothing you will realize two things:

That the styles amply fulfill the requirements in accordance with fashion, and

That the fabrics and workmanship are of such a character as those for which you've paid higher prices.

These two points make our suits the best values in town.

that is being provided to increase facilities for mining and industrial enterprises. The Baltimore and Ohio railroad expended millions of dollars in cutting down grades on its lines, removing tunnels and providing rolling stock and other equipment to handle increased coal and other tonnage from this section. The New York Central System is just completing its line from Pittsburgh to Fairmont, which will give an entirely new outlet to the freightage originated in this region. Everybody knows there is undeveloped tonnage for even a third system. These new and improved railroad facilities will inevitably result in largely increased coal production as well as the establishment of new and additional industries such as glass works, iron mills, etc., all of which will demand more interurban and street car lines. To meet this demand and as a precaution against possibility of future power troubles, the company will install, as stated above, a new plant located at Hutchinson, about midway between Fairmont and Clarksburg, a picture of which appears in another place.

The new plant is located about one hundred feet from the central power plant of the Consolidation Coal Company's 4,000 K. W. gas engine installation with arrangements for 5,000 additional K. W. when necessary. The Traction Company's plant is composed of three 1,250 K. W. Bethlehem Steel Company's engines, with completed foundation for an additional 1,250 K. W. engine. The plant is arranged on such a scale that six additional engines can be installed whenever needed, but as the present load of the Traction Company is only 3,000 K. W., it will be seen that the new plant is amply sufficient for all requirements. The generators are of General Electric Company type. Switchboards are Westinghouse. The building and foundations are of the most substantial kind and are being constructed by the Nicola Building Company of Pittsburgh. While the new plant is, as stated, amply sufficient for all present requirements, and in fact, for much additional work, it is not the intention of the company to abandon the 3,000 K. W. steam turbine plant at Jayenne. The plan is to put it in perfect condition to provide against break-downs and for other emergency and reserve use, thereby insuring continuous service under all conditions for the Traction Company's lines and for lighting and power contracts.

Though water conditions at the present Jayenne plant have been normal since the 1st of August, and will remain satisfactory so far as impurities are concerned until the droughts of next summer in June or July may cause a pollution which will render it unfit for boiler uses, the traction company has anticipated all possible contingencies that might impair service by securing the first engine for the new plant to be installed and in operation by January 1, next.

The view of the plant shows it as it will appear completed. Construction was begun September 1, and the excavation for the building, which is 72x211 in size, is already completed. Concrete piles are being driven by a large force working day and night, and every detail of construction and installation will be pushed to complete the whole plant at the earliest possible date.

The installation of the huge gas engines to supply power introduced here by the Consolidation Coal Company and the traction company marks a distinct advance over the old method of steam power. With the abundance of natural gas in this region, plants requiring great power will not likely again revert to steam with the handicaps which droughts and consequent impure water place upon steam power plants at certain seasons of the year.

The completion of the new plant is a matter of great interest to the people of the upper Monongahela valley. Perhaps they never so fully appreciated the great conveniences and the almost imperative necessity of a continuous operation of the lines of the Monongahela Valley Traction Company as they did last summer when that continuous operation was disturbed. They realized then how important a factor it was to the business of the whole valley and how impossible it would be to get along without it. Such experience has brought the company and its patrons closer together. The company feels that no expenditure should be spared to accommodate and serve its patrons, and the patrons realize that the operation of traction lines is not all a sort of joyous holiday where there is but little work of responsibility except the mere running of cars and the collection of transportation fares. The management of the details of the operation of the various lines under the ownership of this company is a work calling for intense application and involves great responsibility. The running of the cars is one of the least of these details, as it is one of the least expenses.

The promoters of these lines build well for the people of this valley when they undertook this gigantic enterprise. Mr. S. L. Watson and his associates who carried the bulk of the investment and labor while it was struggling to establish these hundred and ten miles of lines, deserve the fullest commendation of all who have been benefited by such enterprise in the three counties of Marion, Harrison and Lewis, where the operation of such lines have been of so much advantage to their people. The public generally have but little conception of the outlay involved in this enterprise. The original cost of construction is but a small part of such outlay. Constant betterment must be provided, depreciation and destruction of cars and equipment is a heavy financial burden on the year's earnings. Repairs and rebuilding of road cuts a large figure, and last and by no means least, tax burdens are laid with a heavy hand upon these similar public corporations. The taxes alone of the Monongahela Valley Traction Company amount to $155.40 for every day in the year. Before a single item of cost of operation, interest on investment or payment of employees and laborers is met, the taxing powers of the state exacts each day $155.40 of its earnings, thereby to that extent assisting in the reduction of the taxes of every farmer, home owner and other citizen of the state.

The day was rather cloudy. Jones viewed the sky wearily. He could hear Florence playing rather a cheerless nocturne by Chopin. Fourteen weeks ago this warlike had begun, and all he had accomplished, he and those with him, was the death or incarceration of a few inconsequential members of the Black Hundred. Always they struck and always he had to ward off. He had always been on the defensive, and a defensive fighter may last a long while, but he seldom wins; and the butler knew that they must win or go down in bitter defeat. There was no half way route to the end; there could be no draw. It all reminded him of thunderbolts; one man knew where they were going to strike.

The telephone rang; at the same moment Florence left the piano. She stopped at the threshold.
"Hello! You? Where have you been? What has happened?"
"Who is it?" asked Florence, stepping forward.

"Jones held up a warning hand, and Florence paused.
"Yes, yes; I hear perfectly. O! You've been working out their new quarters? Good, good! But be very careful, sir. One never knows what may happen. They have been quiet for some time now. Ah! You can't work the ceiling this time? Window over the way. Very good, sir. But be careful."

The word "sir" caught Florence's attention. She ran to Jones and seized him by the arm.
"Who was that?" she cried, as he turned away from the telephone.
"Why?"

"You said 'sir.'"
Jones' eyes widened. "I did?"
"Yes, and it's the first time I ever heard you use it over the telephone. Jones, you were talking to my father?"
"Pardon, Miss Florence. Do not ask me any questions. I cannot answer any. I dare not."
